

Contributors

Hussainatu J. Abdullah is a Sociologist with over 30 years of experience working on promoting gender equality as a Researcher and Consultant at national and regional levels across the African continent. Hussainatu is the Gender and Youth Consultant for the Islamic Development Bank.

Corina M. Rodriguez Enriquez is a Researcher at the National Council of Research (CONICET) and the Interdisciplinary Centre for the Study of Public Policy (CIEPP) in Buenos Aires, Argentina. She co-directs the PhD Program in Political Economy at the Interdisciplinary School of Social Studies, University of San Martin (IDEAS-UNSAM). She is Professor at national universities in Argentina; Consultant for international agencies; and Executive Committee Member at Development Alternatives with Women for a New Era (DAWN). She holds a BA in Economics (University of Buenos Aires), an MA in Public Policy (Institute of Social Studies, The Hague, The Netherlands), and a PhD in Social Sciences (Flacso, Argentina).

Sue Godt has retired after engaging in development work, development education and solidarity activism since the 1970s. She has lived in Sub-Saharan Africa for over 30 years working at community, national and regional levels in community and women's development, knowledge management, and health and rights-based programming. While with the International Development Research Centre, she supported partners to strengthen health policy and systems research programmes, mainly in West Africa, and also identified overall health programming lessons. Since completing her doctorate in growing global corporate involvement in Kenya's and Uganda's basic health and education services, she has helped DAWN to develop films and podcasts about public-private partnerships.

Allana Kembabazi is an Expert on social and economic rights in Uganda. She is a Programme Manager with the Initiative for Social and Economic Rights (ISER), using research, advocacy, targeted litigation, and community engagement to advance economic and social rights, particularly for the poor and vulnerable. At ISER, Allana works on the right to health, sustainable health financing and macro-economic policy, as well as on economic inclusion and fiscal policy. She has researched public-private partnerships and the right to health, conducted a preliminary human rights impact assessment framework for private actors and the right to health, and was part of the multi-sectoral steering committee that developed Uganda's National Action Plan on Business and Human Rights. Allana is a Lawyer and Human Rights Advocate.

Sylvia Ohene Marfo is a Food Studies Researcher and focuses on the importance of food in all aspects of society which is embedded in the Sociology of Food and Agriculture. She is the Research and Programmes Manager for the Union for African Population Studies (UAPS) where she oversees the implementation of the African Research and Data Use Capacity Building Fellowship for Early Career Researchers. She holds a PhD in Sociology from the University of Ghana.

Hlengiwe Ndlovu is a Senior Lecturer at the Wits School of Governance (WSG), University of the Witwatersrand. Her research interests include questions on gender and gender equality, democracy from below, local governance, protests, collective action and change. Among other publications, Hlengiwe has written on the role of women in the #FeesMustFall movement, histories of women's participation in community protests and the precarity of women during the COVID-19 pandemic. She is also the co-editor of Rioting and Writing: Diaries of the Wits #Fallists (2017) – an edited book documenting the experiences of student activists during the #FeesMustFall protests.

Amanda Odoi holds a PhD in Development Studies with specialisation in gender. She is a Research Fellow at the Centre for Gender Research, Advocacy and Documentation (CEGRAD) and an affiliate lecturer with the School for Development Studies (DIDS), both at the University of Cape Coast, where she engages in teaching, research, advocacy and capacity-building training on women's and gender issues. Amanda is passionate about gender issues and key populations and aims to create a space to highlight their concerns and critical role in society through research and advocacy. Her research interests are sexualities, feminist activism, gender-based violence and masculinities. She is currently co-researching feminist organising in the 21st century and societal responses to LGBT+ issues in Ghana.

Takyiwaa Manuh was the Director of the Institute of African Studies, University of Ghana from 2002 to 2009. She is a fellow of the Ghana Academy of Arts and Sciences. She is an Emerita Professor of the University of Ghana, and until her retirement in May 2017, she served as the Director of the Social Development Policy Division, of the United Nations Economic Commission for Africa (ECA), located in Addis Ababa.

Nedson Pophiwa is a Senior Lecturer at the Wits School of Governance with a career spanning over a decade in the private, public and academic sectors. An economic historian by training, he uses contemporary history methods and inter-disciplinary social science approaches to unpack current trends and challenges in governance, public policy and development. His current research focuses on public-private partnerships in student housing as part of his broader interest in understanding the transition in state-society relations in contemporary Africa. Nedson's research initiatives cover various African countries, including South Africa, Botswana, Zimbabwe, Kenya and Uganda.

Rose A. Sackeyfio, author of African Women Narrating Identity: Local and Global Journeys of the Self (Routledge 2023), has taught in the Department of English and Liberal Studies at Winston Salem State University for almost three decades. Her research and teaching are situated at the nexus of inter-disciplinary scholarship on literatures of African and African-Diaspora women, Women's Studies, Cultural Studies and recently, South Asian Women's Writing. Her research interests evolved from over 40 years of travel and research in West Africa. Her publications and scholarly pursuits explore various aspects of the lives of African and African Diaspora women in the global arena. She is the author of West African Women in the Diaspora: Narratives of Other Spaces, Other Selves (Routledge, 2021). She is editor of a volume of critical essays, Women Writing Diaspora in the 21st Century (Lexington Books, 2021) and co-editor of a collection of critical essays, Emerging Perspectives on Akachi Adimora Ezeigbo (Lexington 2017).

Penelope Sanyu is a pan-African feminist Lawyer, Thinker, Writer, Scholar, and Agent of Positive Social Change and Transformation. With extensive experience in development work, she has dedicated most of her career to building the capacity of young people to innovatively engage with and influence policy changes in different communities. She has experience using social arts as a tool for socio-political transformation and has organised several social arts platforms at the national level. Penelope has a wealth of knowledge working with civil society organisations, the women's movement and feminist movements using decolonial approaches to dismantle systems of oppression. Her work is centred on questions of how we can organise better and create spaces for meaningful engagement. Her heart beats for reproductive and social justice and ultimately a world where women are seen, heard, and valued.

Gertrude Dzifa Torvikey is a Research Fellow at the Institute of Statistical, Social and Economic Research (ISSER), University of Ghana. She is also the Programme Officer on the Feminist Africa Project at the Institute of African Studies, University of Ghana. She pursued a PhD in Development Studies and an MPhil in Migration Studies at the University of Ghana. Her research interests include agrarian livelihoods, gender, migration, and labour issues.

Mardiya Siba Yahaya is a digital sociologist, researcher and community movement builder whose work investigates the implications of technology surveillance and datafied societies on minoritised genders and communities in the Global South. Mardiya's work currently involves using community-led practices to design, facilitate and sustain networks of digital rights communities globally.